Don't Daze Me, Bro

Laser Energetics has developed a crime-fighting device designed to "save lives, one daze at a time." The company says its Dazer Laser shoots a beam of light so debilitating and disorienting it can cause momentary nausea.

The Dazer has military applications, as well. General Dynamics this summer announced it landed a $2.6 million contract to produce the new non-lethal device.

The Dazer Laser's continuous wave and modulating green laser beam temporarily impair a threat's vision and awareness. The products operate on standard batteries, are lightweight and ergonomically comfortable. Effective range, about to 1.5 miles – quite a bit longer than a Taser.
